RICH HAVE HARVEST DANCE.

Interesting and Fun-Providing Festival Given by Mrs. Fish at Newport.

The crowning event of the season of 1906 at Newport took place the other night—a "harvest festival dance"—and it fell to the lot of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish to give this function. Previous to the dance Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, who was associated with Mrs. Fish in the arrangements for the dance, gave a dinner to 112 guests at Rose Cliff. As soon as the dinner was over the guests entered the carriages and automobiles and the journey to Crossways was begun. At the gateway of Crossways, surmounting the two massive stone posts, were two huge mock pumpkins made into "jack o' lanterns," each one 12 feet in circumference and inside were brilliant calcium lights. All the trees and shrubbery about the grounds were brilliantly illuminated by twinkling lights.

The peasants' dance took place in the drawing-room. All of the dancers were dressed in the Dutch, French and Hungarian peasant costumes.

Fun was added to the affair by the harvest offerings presented to Mrs. Fish by the guests as they entered the villa. Mrs. Oelrichs had a duck under her arm, Harry Lehr a suckling pig, Mrs. Belmont a shanghai rooster, Mr. Dolan a gander, Mrs. Ladenburg a chicken, and other guests had vegetables of all descriptions. At the end of the procession, and to cap the climax, appeared Herman Oelrichs struggling with a calf.

LOST IN A GREAT CAVE.

Note Found in a Bottle Purporting to Be from Hopeless Wanderer.

While Will Russell, a son of Chief of Police Frank Russell, of Bedford, Ind., and two other young men, named Orin Scisco and Nester Stevenson, were exploring a cave on the farm of a man named Kern, 1½ miles southwest of Bedford, the other day, they discovered a mysterious note, which, if true, reveals the awful death of an unknown man.

After going quite a distance back in the cave, which is said to be about three miles in extent, a bottle was discovered at the top of a high precipice in an indentation in the rocks, and was held in place by mud which had been daubed around it. The bottle contained a note, which read as follows:

"Have been lost here since Sunday, December 20, 1894. It is now 10:35 p. m., December 25. Am hungry and lost all day. 'JAKE O'LEEN, Lincoln, Neb.'"

One the back of the note was written: "Tell my friends I died happy. 'JAKE'."

The bottle was of a quart size and had contained coal oil, as the note was saturated with it.

The young men made a thorough search for anything that might lead to an explanation of the mystery, but they were unable to go beyond the precipice upon which the bottle was found. The depth of the declivity seemed to be about 50 feet, and water could be plainly heard falling in the depths below.

On May 13, 1894, James Corbin and Martin Hansford undertook to explore this cave and were lost through their light going out, and it was only after many hours of hard labor and perseverance that they regained the entrance.

Whether the note was written by some one who was really lost or as a joke is a mystery, but it is certainly possible that one could enter this great cave and become lost. A search will be made again during the coming week, when an attempt will be made to descend the precipice where the bottle was found.

Heating of Substances.

Water is the hardest of all substances to heat, with the single exception of hydrogen gas. The easiest two are mercury and lead, which stand in this respect on nearly the same footing.

Heavy Bank Deposits.

One hundred and eleven of the national banks of the United States hold deposits of $5,000,000 or more each—a record that has never been equaled by any other nation.

USED-OVER BOTTLES.

Those That Have Held Champagne Are Used Over and Over.

Foreign Made Glass Banks Highest in the Trade—Interesting Facts About an Important Business in This Country.

Does all of the American-grown champagne go into bottles in America, and is it sold as what it is, or does it pretend to be of French origin?

What in particular suggests this question, says the Chicago Chronicle, is the statement recently made by a visitor to the New York state wine district that whatever may be said about the wine itself, the champagne bottle cannot be made in America. A member of one of the leading New York bottle manufacturers said, when asked what he thought of this statement: "For ourselves, we don't try to make champagne bottles; beer bottles are more in our line. But I don't believe champagne bottles can be successfully made anywhere in this country. A champagne bottle is expected to be of a certain recognized green color and a certain tapering form. We can get the form, of course, and we can get the color pretty nearly, but we cannot get that brilliancy in the glass which you find in a French bottle, combined with sufficient strength."

Another manufacturer took the view that the question of ability or inability to equal the French bottles with bottles of American sand is immaterial, because the supply of second-hand champagne bottles is fully equal to the demand.

From these two statements it appears that the growers of American champagne in California, New York and Ohio must be content with bottles that have already done service in bringing the wine of Rheims to this country. A bottle dealer in New York says that this is undoubtedly the case.

"This firm," he said, "is the largest firm of bottle dealers in the United States. We ship, even in slack times, from three to four car loads of second-hand champagne bottles a week. A car load is from 250 to 300 gross. This means, of course, about 150,000 bottles a week, or 7,500,000 bottles a year."

The destination of this mighty army of bottles? The dealer begged to be excused from giving particulars. Some of the bottles find their way to California, but it was gathered that much of the bottling is done in New York. And the much more interesting fact was elicited that a large number of bottles which come to America as champagne bottles degenerate to the base uses of beer. This is one result of the war with Spain and the rescue of Cuba. Beer is now largely exported to Cuba in ex-champagne bottles, which seems to prove the assertion of the bottlemaker that there is no demand for such bottles at first hand for American-made champagne.

The enormous numbers quoted by the bottle dealer suggests strong reflections, melancholy to the total abstainer, on the bibulousness of this great city. It must not be assumed, however, that all the 7,500,000 annual "dead men" shipped by this firm popped their corks within the limits of New York city. Many of these come from other cities. But the greater number lie at the door of New York, where the janitors and bartenders put them. Besides, Kipling's description of Fuzzy Wuzzy—

"E's all of sand and ginger when alive, And 'e's generally shammin' when 'e's dead—" applies in both points to a bottle of champagne. It becomes a "dead man" only to be washed in a huge wholesale way by either the dealer or the bottler and filled up again with " fizz" in some mysterious way. So very likely the same bottle is sold full, popped, emptied, sold empty, washed and filled again as often as half a dozen times in one year. This is a terrible record of giddy dissipation for the bottle. It reconciles decent Americans to the thought that such bottles cannot be made out of American minerals.

Awards at the Paris Exposition.

Forty-two thousand seven hundred and ninety exhibitors out of 75,531 have received awards at the Paris exposition. The United States obtained 1,981 awards, of these 220 were grand prizes, 486 gold medals, 583 silver medals, 422 bronze medals, 270 honorable mentions, and a long list of gold, silver and bronze medals of collaborators. In the last exposition only 1,000 prizes, including those for collaborators, were given. The prizes were as follows: Grand prizes, 55; gold medals, 214; silver medals, 300; bronze medals, 246; honorable mentions, 229. The names of those who received grand prizes or gold medals have been made public.—Scientific American.

The sprightly summer girl came out in a new role at Rockaway Beach, New York, the other day. Shortly after midnight two alarms rang, and the pine volunteer hose companies at the beach started on a run for the Rockaway Beach Gas Light company's buildings, which were ablaze. Only four of the members of the Oceana hose responded for duty, but they bravely tackled the job of hauling the heavy truck down the boulevard. They had gone but a few hundred yards when they were ready to drop from exhaustion.

A crowd of young women in front of the Seaside house noticed the predicament of the Oceana company.

"Come on, girls," shouted a pretty young woman in a superb evening gown, running out to the truck and catching hold of the lines. Her example was followed by two score girls, who ran with the truck to the scene of the fire and bravely assisted in adjusting the hose for business.
